Al go to a Scholar you trust and ask him if the following sentence in Arabic is ok:

رحمة الله مفتقرة علي إرادته

I would not need to go to any scholar to tell you: 1). That علي is a name and not a preposition. 2). That مفتقر takes the preposition إلى and not the name علي, and let's say you got it right and actually used على then that would still be wrong! Hijāb, you are exposing yourself from all angles:

1. Ignorant of aqidah
2. Arrogant, vile manners

3. Pauper in Arabic

And I never used this butchered sentence anywhere in any of my writings. This is your attempt to fabricate more lies against me.

Rather, I said: “Allāh’s attributes of mercy, creating and speaking depend on His will.”

which is a correct meaning and in scholarly language and explanatory texts of ‘aqīdah the terms:

—muta‘alliqah bi, (متعلقة ب)

—manūṭah bi (منوطة ب) or

—mutawaqqifah ‘alā (متوقفة على)

are used, and these are my words. I have expressed a correct meaning, through scholarly language. Hijāb you are an academic con-man and an intellectual fraudster. I wonder if you used Google Translate to do your translation?
